GILBERT STUART.

A VERY agreeable custom, derived from the French, has lately been established among us of contributing to the renown of a painter by an exhibition of his works after death. The late collection in the Museum of Fine Arts of many works of our great artist, W. M. Hunt, brought to the public, and even to his intimates, a sense of astonished surprise at the fulness and variety of his genius. America has been most fortunate in having had two great portrait painters at an early period, and thus securing the presentation of historic characters, the founders of a nation. There was, soon after Stuart's death, a collection of his portraits in the old Athenæum of Pearl Street, and some few can remember with what delight crowds flocked thither to enjoy them. But that is in the far past, and now we propose to freshen the laurels upon the brows of perhaps the greatest portrait painter of his time, and to enjoy his works in a more extended way than our fathers did through a more ample collection than was then possible.

Stuart did for the preceding generation what Copley had done for a previous one. It would be indecorous if, in our new temple to art, we should forget either of these great men. Not long since a collection, not certainly complete, but adequate to represent him, was exhibited, in the Boston Athenæum, of Copley's pictures, and the present collection of Stuart's portraits is a pleasant fulfilment of our duty to the other painter.

Many artists are invited, through the deathless affection or vanity of relatives, to try their hands at portraiture; they succeed with many degrees of difference. Some catch only the look of the perishable mould of the spirit, but here and there comes one who reads the character and gives us the very man "as he lived." Such a one was Gilbert Stuart; always sociable and conversant with men, with the habit, facilitated by nature, of seeing a person through the disguise of the flesh, the practice of his art reached a perfection of interpretation which made him immortal. Of course, neither to him nor to us could every head be equally interesting Genius will slight what does not attract it; but even when indifferent to his subject, the method of Stuart was so fine that we can be interested in that, if not in the features before us.

But how often Stuart is at his best! With his unfailing technique, that learned, almost scientific, knowledge of the hues and values of flesh, he seems always a fresh surprise. He never muddles, he never experiments, he never gives us the too little or too much, which either leaves us craving or burdens our attention with the sense of fatigue. He goes directly to the point of expressing the character through its medium of individual features and color. So sane was his manner, and so simple his tints and his vehicles, that time touches him with a lightness it keeps for few else. Who ever saw a Stuart which was cracked or degraded in tone, except through some genuine accident? While Copley, without injury, gains, like Old Madeira, a tenderer topaz tint befitting the venerable antiquely dressed forefathers we know, Stuart's genius, so fresh, direct, and social, demands that time shall spare him as it has.

And as the family looks up with affectionate reverence to the living face upon the wall, pleased to see in the children of to-day their features taking on unexpected likenesses betraying their parentage, they come at last to think that there is magic in Stuart's pencil, confusing the living with the dead, and clasping in one bond the dear ties of blood.

Stuart did all this because he was the right man in the right place. He and his work fitted each other; and where did he get his secret? He found it in himself. If his originality had been less, the cold, academic method of West, who was his master, would have blurred or extinguished its brightness. There will be other noble portrait painters, but there will not be another Stuart. Therefore it is instructive, as well as delightful, to gather his great company of vanished men and women together, and through his eyes to live again in the past.

It would be superogatory in the little space we have, to give details of the life, or anecdotes illustrating the humor of the artist. Both can be found in the important work upon Stuart written by Mr. George C. Mason. A popular, cheaper edition of this expensive book should be given the public, which desires to know everything about the great artist. Stuart's life, like a ring, is shut within the figures 1755, when he was born at Newport, and 1828, in the July of which he died in Boston. Almost up to that latter date, beginning when he was sixteen years of age, he was occupied with portraiture; an ever-increasing crowd followed his advancing years, demanding of his genius that touch of immortality which it only could give.

Not America only, but England, furnished the subjects for his pencil. His portraits are daily more cherished in England, and some of the very finest were painted there.

CATALOGUE.

The portraits are hung in the Allston and Water-Color Rooms.

201. — Washington. "The Athenæum Head."

Painted from life. Bought after Stuart's death, of his widow, and presented to the Boston Athenæum.

"A letter of Stuart's which appeared in the New York Evening Post, in 1863, attested by three gentlemen of Boston, with one from Washington, making the appointment for a sitting, proves the error long current in regard both to the dates and the number of this artist's original portraits of Washington. He there distinctly states that he never executed but three from life, the first of which was so unsatisfactory that he destroyed it; the second was the picture for Lord Lansdowne; and the third, the one now belonging to the Boston Athenæum. The finishing touches were put to the one in September, 1795; to the other, at Philadelphia, in the spring of 1796. This last, it appears by a letter of Mr. Custis, which we have examined, was undertaken against the desire of Washington, and at the earnest solicitation of his wife, who wished a portrait from life of her illustrious husband, to be placed among the other family pictures at Mt. Vernon. For this express purpose, and to gratify her, the artist commenced the work, and Washington agreed to sit once more. It was left intentionally unfinished."

The second is now in London.

PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON.

Stuart states that he painted three from life, — one that subsequently was rubbed out, the full-length for the Marquis of Lansdowne, and the one generally known as the Athenæum head.

The first, in which the right side of the face was turned to the spectator, was painted in 1795. Of it four copies only are known. Within a few months followed the full-length, and the last, the commonly received type, in 1796.

The list here printed gives, as far as known, the title of the picture or the name of the person at whose order it was painted, followed by that of the present owner: —
